Description

Welcome to The Noyer-Wildhagen House, c. 1807. 286 Meeting Street, Unit C is a beautifully restored condominium in one of Charleston's coveted historic homes. Originally owned and built by Ms. Abigail Noyer and later passed down to the Wildhagen Family, this stunning Federal-style brick single house has a rich history. Meticulously restored and now home to handsome condominiums, the property was honored with the prestigious Carolopolis Award by the Charleston Preservation Society. Stepping inside through the private piazza, the bright foyer leads to you the grand living room. The living room is outfitted with timeless architectural details - heart-pine wood floors, an elegant fireplace, soaring ceilings, detailed moldings and custom lighting. The spacious kitchen offers an abundance of cabinet and counter space. The striking primary bedroom with towering ceilings features a lovely, recently renovated ensuite bathroom. Conveniently, the bathroom can also be accessed from the hall. A walk-in closet and reimagined laundry room complete the primary bedroom suite. The private, sunny piazza is a peaceful retreat in the heart of the city and allows you to take in the sites of Ansonborough and Downtown Charleston. 286 Meeting Street is perfectly positioned amidst Charleston's finest restaurants, shopping, art galleries, and parks. Whether you're seeking a charming pied-à-terre or a full-time residence, this exceptional home offers both history and modern elegance in an unbeatable location.
